SJZ: Social Justice Zine 2018

Theme: Food Matters

Gender & Sexuality Studies (genders.nmsu.edu) at New Mexico State University puts together a zine (self-made publication) each spring. We are dedicated to focusing each issue on topics linked to social justice and intersectionality, including pieces specifically centered on borders (as concept & reality), the Borderlands, deportation, mixed-status, migration, refugees and displaced persons, and transnational positionality.

We are open to entries from current NMSU students and alumni as well as people in the community, the Borderlands region, and beyond.

We are currently accepting submission for 2018. The 2018 theme seeks submissions that address the topic of food from intersectional and social justice perspectives. We are seeking submissions that address matters connected to food production, consumption, the body and food, food deserts, hunger, SNAP, recipes & memoir, food and culture, class, race, and/or gender, queer foods, politics, unsustainability of agrifood systems, science, right to food, food justice, and food sovereignty movements, ecology, land use, and more.

- We accept essays, personal narratives, fiction, and poetry under 500 words (doc or docx)
- Original photography, comics, and artwork (jpegs only)
- Handwritten entries are also accepted (jpegs)

Send entries to lawill@nmsu.edu (Dr. Williams, editor) and mjonet@nmsu.edu (Dr. Jonet, assistant editor). Include a 50-100 word bio. Final deadline: April 1, 2018.
